PRODUCTION AND MATERIAL FEATURES

First of all, the time required to find and select the raw material, which must come exclusively from controlled and authorized plantations, is longer than usual. Then there is the time required for maturing, the rest period of the wood, which is much longer than that of any other type of wood. Not forgetting the drying time, during which all traces of humidity are eliminated. The drying of olive wood take place very slowly and gradually. And then there is the woodworking time.

Olive wood can have an irregular surface, with ribs and bulges.

Although olive wood is very unstable, with excellent resistance to humidity and different environmental conditions it should be considered still a natural material. So consider any knots, little spaces in between of wooden layers as a natural characteristic of this kind of wood that moves and modify continuously during its life.
